Gilson, Erinn G. The Ethics of Vulnerability: A Feminist Analysis of Social Life and Practice. New York: Routledge, 2014. The most in-depth philosophical account of vulnerability to date. Gilson argues that vulnerability is neither good nor bad; it is the experience of openness that allows for transformation.

Ing, Michael D.K. The Dysfunction of Ritual in Early Confucianism. New York: Oxford University Press, 2012. An examination of the role ritual plays in the Confucian Record of Ritual. Ing shows that ritual, in a Confucian context, enables a complex society, which allows for moral self development, but also allows for the creation of systems that threaten morality.

Ivanhoe, Philip J. Confucian Moral Self Cultivation. Indianapolis: Hackett Publishing, 2000. A survey of seven Confucian thinkers' programs of moral enhancement. Accessible to non-specialists.

Puett, Michael J. The Ambivalence of Creation: Debates Concerning Innovation and Artifice in Early China. Stanford: Stanford University Press, 2001. An overview of early Chinese thought on the ability of human beings to shape the world we live in. Puett demonstrates that the notion of continuity with nature (assumed by many scholars to be the default position of early Chinese thinkers) arose at a particular historical moment, and that some early Chinese thinkers advocated creating society in tension with nature.

Tessman, Lisa. Moral Failure: On the Impossible Demands of Morality. New York:

Oxford University Press, 2015. Tessman explores the ways in which the demands of morality exceed our ability to be moral, revealing the tragic nature of human moral experience. This book challenges our ability to enhance life in ways that do not account for tragedy.
